First, Then Board

Show one hard thing and the good thing that comes next. Write or tape a card in each box.

How to use it

- Say it short: first shoes, then park. Point to the board instead of repeating yourself.
- Keep the then real and soon. If you put it on the board, follow through.
- Use it for the one tricky moment of the day, not for everything.

How to Use a Visual Schedule

Short, consistent, and at your child's eye level.

- [ ] Ages 2 to 3: show 3 or 4 cards at a time, one routine only. Point and name each step. A First, Then board is often enough.
- [ ] Ages 4 to 6: a full morning or bedtime strip of 5 to 7 cards. Let them move each card to All done or flip it over.
- [ ] Ages 7 to 9: a daily schedule with times written on the cards. Kids can set it up the night before.
- [ ] Ages 10 to 12: swap pictures for a written checklist they keep in a planner, and use cards only for new or busy days.
- [ ] Setup: a strip of tape, a clipboard, or hook-and-loop dots on the fridge or the back of a door, with an All done envelope at the end.
- [ ] Tip: practice the schedule together for a week. Then point to the next card instead of giving the next instruction.
